The plan of "residential supervision" by Methodist bishops is already giving sutisfaction to Methodists in New Hampshire and Vermont, as it has enabled Hishop Hamilton, of Boston, to give the two States more Episcopal service within the past two months than they had enjoyed during the interregnisms of conference sections for the preceding four vars.

Father Joseph Caruana, first Catholic missionary among the Indians of the Pacific Northwest, and recognized as the founder of that faith in what was then known as Oregon, will be the central figure in the celebration at Spokane next fall of the fiftieth anniversary of the planting of the Catholic faith in that part of the central, Fifty rears ago, on October the 1803, Father Caruana baptized seventy-five Indian children and five adults, all members of the Cocur d'Alene tribe, the bisptism being held on the spot where the Northern Pacific Railway's passenger station now stands in Spokane. An investigation by Father George F. Weibel, of Gonzaga Dulversity, shows that Father Caruana, at the head of a band of twelve priests, found his way to Spokane River Falls in the early 1805. Father Weibel is authority for the statement that the first baptism of Indiana in the Pacific Northwest was conducted at the site of what is now Spokane, the Cottober 1802.

So far as is known, Father Caruana is the only one of the band of ploneer priests now living. After completing his work with the tribes around Spokane, he went to De Smet, Idaho, where he founded the first Catholic mission in that part of the country. The mission still stands, and the aged priest, known to the In-"Ereoing Scenes from the Old Book," a lecture interspersed with sacred songs, will be given by Rev. E. D.
